FROGS

Earlier this morning I was scrolling along the towering cliffs. When I gazed below the misty black clouds where hovering above me, annoyed waves were clawing against the cliffs. When I saw them the waves came up to the cliffs, the water drained away. I realized the waves were giant iron fingers! Another five fingers rose to the side of the jagged cliffs. The illuminous shimmering moon lit up the patch of water behind the metal fingers. Suddenly the bright patch of water sparkled to a blueish silver! Just then an iron head more like a giant metal bowling ball rose over the river. Its eyes glowed bright green like glowsticks changing colour.
Then a giant iron foot the size of a house rose out the saltywater and dropped to the ground like a boulder beside me soaking me with sea water, it was the Iron Man...

I ran. I ran home. I ran home as fast as the speed of sound. I kicked open the door and screamed "Mum Dad the Iron Man's back!". Mum turned so pale I could almost see through her. Dad grabbed his gun, my big brother fainted. We dived into the car to warn the villagers of the horrid news. Later we had formed a small army, we marched to the beach only stopped by a terrible sight, bits of combine harvester lay everywhere as if it had rained metal we were horrified! The Iron Man was eating farm machinery! We carried on to the beach talking to each other about what to do to stop this. We decided to dig a hole to trap the iron man, a tremendous hole it was gapping with darkness, sides as sheer as walls we caved up the hole and as bait a rusty old lorry.

FROGS

WELL DONE IMOGEN!

After I saw the enormous iron creature I was so frightened
I said "I need to sprint home as fast as I can!" so I did sprint home.
home, home I screamed "MUM DAD SIS!" "THE IRON MAN IS BACK!"
Mum turned pale, dad was clenching his fists my little sis and she crying with terror. The next day we dug a colossal, huge, deep, dark hole. "Is this iron giant nice or mean?"

WELL DONE TED!

L.O. Effective story openers

Colin wretched his clothes on and headed down stairs for breakfast, just like normal. His mother was by the cutting board making breakfast and his father was on a stall reading the paper on the front it read:

2nd November 1940

with a picture of a bomb. "Good morning Colin" his mother said handing him a piece of toast.

"Thanks," Colin said, "Morning father."

"Morning, son." His father replied.

"I'm going to meet John on the way to school" he said and walked towards the door. The wind was strong and it blew through his short cut brown hair.

LO: Ejected Story openers

One ordinary morning, I woke up to find my little brother Alane laying at the end of the bed curled up in a ball. "Alane what are you doing," I said firmly. Alane started with fear.

"What? What?"

"What are you doing here?"

"I had a bad dream about father. When he left to Singapore."

"Oh not again. Come on let get food."

As me and Alane walk down stairs we grab our bags and we were on our way.
