Back to the Past

It was the 21st of May, the noisy television was booming through the whole house. A tall, blonde-haired girl was lounging in her living room transfixed on the television. Her mum, a genius who invented time travel, stepped into the room.

"Honor will be here any minute, and lunch is nearly ready," Mum said in a gentle voice.

"Okay?" Haley shrugged.

The thing is I have to head out and have meeting with the buyer for the time travel machine, also don't touch that while I'm gone.

Mum said with urgency.

"I won't, you know that," replied Haley, dingdong, "Was the doorbell, Honor must be here! Love you bye!"

Then, Honor stepped into the house while mum rushed out. She brushed her hair silky, bruno hair out of her eyes and said in confusion "at was that all about!"

"She's late to a meeting," Haley explained. After that, she strolled into the kitchen and denounced their w During their lunch Honor gestured towards

Letters from Sukie 19/1/40

I quickly walked through the huddles of people to get to our seats. Olive and Cliff were very excited but I was dreading leaving them. We finally found our plush, velvet seats but even the soft fabric couldn't calm my nerves. I could feel the guilt already building up inside me. I could feel Cliff's little leg excitedly shake against mine. The monochrome screen turned on and Olive and Cliff stared in awe at the projection sheet. I glanced at my watch and I was late. I sprang up out of my seat and Olive's curious Cedar eyes stared at me but Cliff's ocean-blue eyes were still transfixed on the screen. I told them I was going to pop to the car and if I'm not back they would meet me in the foyer after the film but they wouldn't see me again after this. It was time to leave.

The cool evening air startled me as I entered the miffed cinema. I quickly walked to the meeting place (because it is so definitely very uneddylike to run in public). I looked around the dark alleyway but there was no sign of him. I suddenly felt warm, heavy hands rest on my shoulders...

"Jasper!" I screamed at him "What on earth are you doing scaring me like that."
