Saharan Gorilla Beetles

The Saharan gorilla beetle is an amazing species of coleoptera. Males can grow up to ten centimetres long, and are surprisingly heavier for its size whilst females are marginably smaller. This report will teach you all you need to know about this extraordinary creature to become a Saharan gorilla beetle expert.

Appearance

Saharan gorilla beetles are a glossy black in colour and are easily identified by their massive outer jaws. Their legs, head and antennae are exceptionally and they have black hairs that protrude from their underside. This species have smooth elytra and small black eyes that have evolved over millions of years to suit their habitat.

Diet

The diet of the omnivorous Saharan gorilla beetle consists mainly of cactus plants but sometimes if cactuses are running low they will consume insects smaller than themselves. They use their large outer jaws to burrow into a cactus and then eat it from the inside. To hunt small insects they will tunnel into the sand and make a hole for them to rest in. Next they will wait until an unfortunate creature wanders over the pit and the Saharan gorilla beetle will jump up out of the sand and catch it in its jaws.

Defence Mechanisms

The Saharan gorilla beetle has many tactics forms of defence to scare off predators. Their most bizarre way of doing this is to thump their hind legs on the ground. If this does not work they will fly onto a bird or if it is a lizard and sting it, but if it is a lizard they will flip it upside down. After doing so they will either curl up into a ball or dig into the sand.

Behaviour

This fascinating creature does not mind their fellow species in their territory but every spring they travel to an oasis to fight over females. If a Saharan gorilla beetle feels threatened by another beetle they will rub their elytra together to make a hissing noise.

Habitat

Saharan gorilla beetles only lives in the harsh climate of the Sahara desert. It can live in two places in its biome, in a cactus or below the sand! Sometimes it will try to nest in travelers tents!

Fun Fact!

After breeding, the males will lay eggs instead of the females.
